HARRY YEARICK DEAD A VICTIM OF POISON

Fiendish Plot Suspected as Result of Domestic Troubles.

MAY MAKE 2 ARRESTS

Brother of John Yearick, of Hecla, Seized with Violent Vomiting Spell After Eating—A Companion, Named Walker, Also Stricken.

Harry Yearick, aged about 33 years, died last night at the home of his brother, John Yearick, at Hecla, supposedly the victim of arsenic placed in food which he ate several days ago. Arrests may be made today or tomorrow. Two persons have been under sispicion since young Yearick became violently ill on Friday of last week.

A companion of Yearick, named Walker, also became ill the same day that the former was stricken. Walker's condition is somewhat improved. Both became ill after eating tomatoes and potatoes.

Yearick was removed to the home of his brother, at Hecla, and Dr. P. S. Fisher, of Zion, was summoned. While being taken from Salona to Hecla Yearick vomited violently on the train. When Dr. Fisher arrived he at once suspected aresenical poisoning. Yearick was extremely weak. His condition yesterday morning was critical but later in the day he rallied. Last night, however, he took a turn for the worse and about 7.30 o'clock he died.

Yearick had more or less domestic trouble. For a time he was somewhat crippled by rheumatism, his hands and arms being almost useless. He placed himself under a physician's care and it was at about this time that his domestic troubles started.

With Walker, Yearick lived near Salona and worked in the limestone quarries. They occupied a small dwelling. On Friday last, Yearick ate the meal which resulted in his illness. That same night Walker also became ill.

"There was every symptom of arsenical poisoning," said Dr. Fisher.

"Do you believe that Yearick was deliberately poisoned?" Dr. Fisher was asked.

"I wouldn't attempt to say," Dr. Fisher replied. "Unfortunately none of the meal which he had been eating and which caused his illness, was saved, and therefore it cannot be analyzed. Whether anybody placed arsenic in the food which Yearick ate is something I do not know and regarding which I do not care to express an opinion."

TO HOLD 50th ANNIVERSARY

Planting of "Old College Orchard" to be Celebrated Tomorrow.

Every resident of Centre and adjoining counties, the faculty and the entire student body at the college are cordially invited to attend the fiftieth anniversary of the planting of the "Old College Orchard" which will be held in the orchard at State College, tomorrow, Friday, May 6.

Gabriel Hiester, president of the State Horticultural Association, will be the principal speaker. The exercises will begin at 9:30 A. M. and will be held in the orchard, weather permitting.

The afternoon will be given to practical demonstrations in pruning and spraying.

Everybody is invited to bring basket lunches and enjoy a picnic dinner in the orchard where accommodations will be provided. Special invitations are being issued to the officers of the various county horticultural associations.

The following is the program:

Welcome,	Dean Thomas F. Hunt.
Response,	Gabriel Hiester.
Historical,	Dr. Wm. A. Buckhout.
Relation to Student Body,	J. A. Runk '10.
Remarks by Visitors.
Demonstration Session, 1:30 P. M.
Pruning,	Prof. W. J. Wright.
Spraying.	Prof. J. P. Stewart.

State Treasurer Wright Installed.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania on Monday handed down an opinion upholding Governor Stuart's appointment of Charles F. Wright as State Treasurer. State Treasurer John O. Sheatz thereupon turned over the office to his successor. Senator A. E. Sisson was sworn in as Auditor General and on Monday assumed charge of the office.

J. C. P. Jones Dead.

J. C. P. Jones, a well known old soldier and former resident of Milesburg, died on Sunday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Morris Lucas, at Clearfield. Deceased was aged about 75 years. His body was brought to Milesburg yesterday for interment.

STATE MODEL ORCHARDS

To Demonstrate Bordeaux-Lead Arsenate Spray in Centre County.

Following the public demonstration on pruning and spraying fruit trees for scale insects held in the State's Model Orchards during March and April the work will now be taken up of applying an effective combined insecticide and fungicide viz., the Bordeaux-Lead Arsenate Spray, which prevents injury to fruits and foliage from codling moth, curculio and other chewing insects, as well as the development of rot, scab, rust, blotch, leaf blights and fungus, etc.

An expert from the Division of Zoology of the Department of Agriculture will be in charge and will show the proper methods of mixing and applying the spray materials and answer questions as well as identify specimens.

The public is cordially invited to attend. The dates of the meetings in this county are as follows:

Tuesday, May 10, orchard of Benjamin Limbert, near Brush Valley.

Wednesday, May 11, orchard of J. J. Arney, near Centre Hall.

Thursday, May 12, orchard of Newton Neidigh, near State College.

Friday, May 13, orchard of Col. W. Fred Reynolds, near Bellefonte.

State Orchard Inspector T. C. Foster will be present at these meetings, and it is also expected that Prof. Surface will be at the last two on the list.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORK

Field Secretary Shartle to Visit Centre County Towns.

A. J. Shartle, of Philadelphia, field secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union, will visit Centre County during the present month and will address meetings in several towns. Mr. Shartle is an eloquent speaker and has been doing splendid work in Pennsylvania. His itinerary follows:

May 13, Centre Line, 7.30 P. M.
May 14, Port Matilda, 7.30 P. M.
May 15, Howard, 2 P. M., and Milesburg, 7.30 P. M.
May 16, Lemont, 7.30 P. M.
May 17, Centre Hall, 7.30 P. M.
May 18, Millheim, 7.30 P. M.

If Mr. Shartle finds it possible for him so to do, he will visit Rebersburg also on May 18.

All Christian Endeavor workers are requested to be present and all others are invited to attend the several meetings.

WATER APPEALS MAY 19

Bellefonte Council Will Hear Citizens at Evening Meeting.

At a meeting of Bellefonte Council, on Monday night, last, it was decided to meet at 7 o'clock, P. M., on May 19, to hear water appeals for the borough. The meeting will be held in Council chamber, in the Logan Hose House.

Council formally executed a deed from the borough to Susan Miles for certain lots in Milesburg borough, which are a part of the old Geen property.

Street Commissioner Samuel Showers made application for an increase in salary, asking for $50 a month, the same as is received by policemen. He now receives $1.50 per day. The application was referred to the Street Committee. The Street Committee was instructed to build a sewer across Water Street, near Beaver and Hoy's row. A balance of $229.20 in the hands of the treasurer was reported. Council executed a note for $1000 for current bills.

Files Petition for State Delegate.

County Chairman Harry Keller has filed a petition with the County Commissioners, entering his name as a candidate for election at the primaries, June 4, as a delegate to the Republican State convention, at Harrisburg, on June 22. A petition was filed some time ago for David Chambers, of Clarence, as a candidate for State delegate. Centre county is entitled to two Republican State delegates. Thus far Mr. Keller and Mr. Chambers are the only candidates in the field.

"Mothers' Day."

Next Sunday May 8, the several churches throughout the world will observe "Mothers' Day." Rec. C. W. Winey, pastor of the United Brethren church, who at the present time is actively engaged in assisting the presiding elder, will have special services for mothers, to which all are cordially invited to attend.

"High Prices."

James H. Maurer, of Reading, will speak in the Diamond, tomorrow (Friday) evening. His subject will be "High Prices."

STATE COLLEGE WINS IN NOTABLE CONTESTS

Representatives Triumph in Educational and Athletic Events.

MISS POND HONORED

Awarded Graduate Fellowship at Bryn Mawr—Talbot Star at Collegiate Meet—Miss McMahan on Indiana Basketball Team.

State College has figured conspicuously in events in the last ten days, winning one triumph after another in athletic and educational contests. Each victory thus won adds to the nation-wide reputation of State College, both as an educational institution and a town of remarkable beauty.

Miss Millicent Pond, of State College, was one of those to win a much-coveted prize at Bryn Mawr College. The faculty of that institution awarded her a graduate fellowship in mathematics. This is worth $200.

Miss Mae McMahon, of State College, is a member of the girls' basketball team of the Indiana State Normal School. The team is especially strong and its numerous victories attest the skill of the several members. Because of its high standard the team was considered worthy of a pretty photograph in a recent issue of the Pittsburg "Gazette-Times."

On Saturday last, State College took a conspicuous part in the annual relay carnival, at Philadelphia. Talbot, for State College, was the star performer in a number of events. He won the Hammer throw, with a score of 160 feet and 6 inches. He won the discus throw, scoring 129 feet and 2 inches, and he also won second place in the shot-put, coming within 2 inches of the record of Horner, the much-heralded Michigan star. Horner was expected by some to be the star of the meet, but Talbot outclassed him and carried off the honors.

TO OIL LINN STREET

East End Residents Volunteer to Pay Cost of Necessary Liquid.

Residents of East Linn Street propose having that street oiled, between Allegheny Street and the residence of Burgess John J. Bower. On Monday night, last, they presented to Council a petition asking that the borough pay the expense of distributing the oil. The property owners along the street volunteered to furnish the oil. Council favored the proposition.

The success attending the oiling of High Street, between the Bush Arcade and the Court House square last year prompted the Linn Street property owners to adopt a like course to keep down the dust during the summer months. West Linn Street, between Allegheny Street and the borough line, will be paved with macadam, as a part of the proposed State road extension, so that oiling to lay the dust is not regarded as necessary.

Property owners along High Street, between the bridge over Spring Creek and Thomas Street, also plan putting down oil during the next few months. A petition has been circulated pleding the property owners and tenants to pay for the oil provided Council will have it properly placed.

SAMUEL HAUPT BURNED

Victim of Disastrous Sunday Morning Fire in Bush Addition.

During a fire in Bush Addition, early Sunday morning, last, Samuel Haupt was painfully burned about the hands and face. One hand was so badly burned that for a time it was feared amputation would be necessary.

All of Mr. Haupt's household goods were destroyed entailing a loss of several hundred dollars. He carried no insurance, so that the loss to him is quite severe.

The house was owned by George Anderson.

Quickly Tired of the West.

Charles Meyers, of Julian, thinks that Centre County is the best in the land and that Bald Eagle Valley is the greatest spot in the county. Five or six weeks ago he packed up his household effects and with his family moved to the state of Washington. He quickly tired of the West and after looking the ground over concluded that Centre County was good enough for him. Last week he returned to the Bald Eagle Valley, glad to be home with friends and expecting to continue to make his home in that section in the future.

11 NEW JUSTICES FAIL TO LIFT COMMISSIONS

Recently Elected Squires in No Hurry to Begin Work.

EIGHT TAKE UP DUTIES

Official Terms Began on Monday, Last—Still Have Ninety Days in Which to File Bonds and be Sworn in—Some Do Not Intend to Serve.

Quite a number of recently elected Justices of the Peace have thus far failed to lift their commissions. Monday, last, was the time for such Justices to take up commissions, although they still have ninety days in which to do so. In some instances it is the intention of those elected not to take out commissions. Where this is the case the vacancies will be filled by appointment by Governor Stuart.

Those who lifted their commissions this week were the following:

William H. Musser, Bellefonte.
Henry D. Brown, Bellefonte.
Henry Meyer, Miles township.
T. B. Jamison, Gregg township.
F. A. Carson, Potter township.
W. H. Minnich, Walker township.
A. W. Reese, Worth township.
J. W. Merryman, Rush township.

Commissions have been issued from the State Department, at Harrisburg, for the following, but which thus far have not been lifted:

A. V. Daugherty, Burnside township.
C. Meginney Hood, State College borough.
J. C. Stere, Unionville borough.
W. Ross Wallace, Milesburg borough,
John B. Hoffman, S. Philipsburg borough.
William M. Leathers, Snow Shoe borough.
W. R. McCloskey, Curtin township.
T. M. Garbrick, Walker township.
John Stine, Patton township.
W. S. Sellers, Patton township.
John Rishel, Benner township.

In most cases where commissions are not lifted it is on the ground that the returns from fees are so small as to not warrant the time and trouble involved in serving as Justice of the Peace.

FORTNEY—ISHLER

Noisy Reception Attends Wedding of Popular Bellefonte Couple.

A pretty wedding was that at 11 o'clock yesterday, when Miss Alice Mae Ishler became the bride of D. Paul Fortney, the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride's parents, former Sheriff and Mrs. W. A. Ishler, in East High Street. Upward of 100 guests were in attendance.

Rev. Robert H. Kline, of Allentown, an uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony. Rev. Dr. J. Allison Platts and Rev. Fred W. Barry also were present. Mrs. Clark Carson played the wedding march. Among the out-of-town guests were the bride's brothers, Willis and Orrie, and their respective wives, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cox, the latter of Altoona. Immediately following the ceremony an informal reception was held, followed by a wedding breakfast. Mr. and Mrs. Fortney departed on a noon train for their wedding tour. On their return, in about ten days, they will make their home with the groom's father, D. F. Fortney, in Bishop Street.

Inasmuch as the groom had been conspicuous in serenading numerous wedding couples, and also due to the fact that he was one of the last of the younger members of the bar to enter the matrimonial field, his fellow-lawyers and Court House officials planned a rather noisy demonstration. A hurdy-gurdy was hired and it doled out all kinds of music while the wedding ceremony was being performed. The Court House bell was vigorously rung for ten or fifteen minutes. Quite a delegation of friends and serenaders were at the Pennsylvania Railroad station when the bride and groom arrived at that place and greeted them with a shower of rice, old shoes, etc.

Mr. Fortney is one of the younger lawyers in Bellefonte and is regarded as being gifted with a splendid knowledge of the law. His bride is an accomplished young woman who is qualified in every way to grace the home to which she will be taken by Mr. Fortney on their return to Bellefonte.

Moose Membership Growing.

Deputy Supreme Organizer Walter S. Greevy, of Altoona, on Tuesday evening installed 35 new members of the Bellefonte Lodge of Moose. The membership of the lodge is now over 300.

MRS. MARY ANNE JOHNSTON

Well Known Bellefonte Woman Dies on Tuesday at Beaver Falls.

A telegram on Tuesday morning, last, announcing the death of Mrs. Mary Anne Johnston, of Bellefonte, at Beaver Falls created profound sorrow among her numerous friends at this place. While not entirely unexpected, the news of her death came as a shock since it was known that she was planning to return home after spending the winter in the western end of the State and her friends were already planning a generous welcome.

Mrs. Johnston became ill exactly one week prior to her death. Owing to her advanced age her system failed to respond to treatment and she gradually became weaker until early Tuesday morning, when she passed away. Her illness in reality dated back about three years, when she fell while leaving the Presbyterian church, at this place, and sustained a fracture of the hip. It was the belief at the time of her friends that her fall was caused by a slight stroke of paralysis.

Just about Christmas, last, Mrs. Johnston went to Beaver Falls to spend the winter with her son, George B. Johnston and family. She had planned returning home on Saturday, last, and her neighbors and other friends were secretly arranging to welcome her home. Then came the news of her illness and finally the message conveying the sad tidings of her death.

Mrs. Johnston was the widow of the late John T. Johnston, a prominent resident and at one time postmaster of Bellefonte. She was 78 years old on Thursday, April 27. Her maiden name was Mary Anne Kinney. Surviving are the following children: Findley, whose home is in Michigan, and who arrived here yesterday; George B., of Beaver Falls; Mrs. Roland Kelley, of western Pennsylvania, and Harry, of Pittsburg.

The body will be brought to Bellefonte today (Thursday) on the 1.23 o'clock train, and taken to the Presbyterian church, of which the deceased was a member. After services at the church, conducted by Rev. Dr. J. Allison Platts, interment will be made at the Union cemetery.

DEATH OF C. H. EVEY

Prominent State College Odd Fellow Dies After Brief Illness.

After a brief illness, C. H. Evey, a prominent citizen of State College, died at his home at that place on Monday evening, last, at 8 o'clock. Mr. Evey had been ill but two weeks, death being due to stomach trouble and pluerisy.

A splendid citizen, a man of many fine traits and popular with a large circle of friends, Mr. Evey was one of the best known and most highly respected residents of State College.

He was a carpenter by occupation and many of the fine buildings at State College testify to his skill. He was a prominent member of the State College lodge of I. O. O. F., and was also active in Beaver Camp, Sons of Veterans, at State College. Mr. Evey was a stanch Republican and was chairman of the Republican committe, at State College.

Mr. Evey was a son of the late Henry and Margaret Evey, who were pioneer settlers of the Branch. He was born February 5, 1852, making his age 58 years. Surviving are his widow, who was Miss Hattie Evey, and four sons and one daughter. The following brothers and sisters also survive: William and Albert of Pittsburg; John and Mrs. Edom Houseman, of Altoona, and Mrs. Hardon Love, of Wilkensburg.

CARPENTER MILLER.

In the death of Carpenter D. Miller at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Shuman Holter, in Howard last Thursday night, that borough lost another of its aged and highly respected citizens. On the Sunday previous to his death he was stricken with a dizzy spell while walking in the garden and after being carried into the house lapsed into unconsciousness, in which condition he remained until death summoned him at 11.50 o'clock Thursday night. He was born in Beech Creek township, Clinton county, on October 15, 1819, being aged over 90 years and was the last of a family of several children. On March 13, 1851, he was united in marriage to Miss Louise L. Wetzler by the elder Nathan J. Mitchell. Practically all of his life was spent in the vicinity of his birth and by trade he was a plasterer, which he followed exclusively during his active life. About 70 years ago he was baptized by the same minister who married him and having united with the Disciple church remained faithful until the end, always living a devout and consistent life. A few years ago he and his wife went to Howard to live with their daughter. Despite his advanced age he was able to read with-

JOY RIDE WAS FATAL TO BLANCHARD MAN

T. C. Williams' Body Wedged Between Shaft and Buggy Wheel.

MET SHOCKING DEATH

Body of Unfortunate Man Discovered When Driverless Horse Returns in Darkness to Livery Stable—Said to Have Been Drinking.

Thornton C. Williams, of Blanchard, popularly known as "Dude" Williams, met with a shocking death early Sunday morning on the road between Blanchard and Beech Creek. While driving home from Beech Creek, he fell out of the buggy, his head became wedged between the wheel and the rear part of the shaft and he was dragged a distance of two miles. The unfortunate man's neck was broken and the spokes of the wheel tore through his scalp to the skull. The tragic accident was not discovered until the horse, with no one driving, returned to the owner's livery stable, at Blanchard. Williams was about 50 years old. He is survived by a widow and one daughter.

About 7 o'clock, on Saturday evening, Williams, with Harry Gunsallus, hired a rig from Liveryman Edgar Bechdel. They went to Beech Creek and on their way over took Christ Bechdel into the buggy with them. The three got a package of express at the Beech Creek station, then drove to the Llewwellyn homestead, about one mile west of Beech Creek, where they spent some time. Williams and a young man by the name of McCloskey took the rig and went to the home of Elijah Young, Gunsallus returning home. McCloskey and Williams started for home. This was the last that anybody saw Williams alive, so far as is known.

Shortly after 2 o'clock, on Sunday morning, Liveryman Bechdel, who was at his home waiting for the return of his [illegible] heard the horse coming through the road and stop in front of the stable. Lighting a lantern, he proceeded to the stable. As he turned the light on the buggy he was horrified to see Williams' body hanging out the side, the man's head lodged tightly between the shaft and wheel and the face turned upward. One foot remained in the buggy and the man's right hand dragged along the ground. Mr. Bechdel saw at a glance that Williams was dead. He summoned neighbors and relatives and when they arrived it was found necessary to remove the wheel from the buggy before the body of the unfortunate man could be released. Williams' hat and the blanket belonging to the buggy were missing. Judged by the condition of his body, it was believed that the accident happened fully one hour before the horse made its way through the darkness to the livery stable.

Coroner S. M. Huff, of Milesburg, held an inquest on Monday when the body of Williams was examined by a jury and also by Dr. W. J. Kurtz, of Howard. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death. It was developed at the inquest that Williams had been freely indulging in intoxicants and it is supposed that while under the influence of liquor he pitched headlong out of the buggy. Williams was alone at the time of the accident. On the coroner's jury were W. I. Harter, Dr. Kurtz, Samuel Robb, William Austin, Frank DeLong and Alexander Heverly.

Williams was a well known resident of Blanchard. He had been employed on the clay train of the Pennsylvania Fire Brick Works, at Beech Creek. Following the inquest by Coroner Huff, Williams' body was prepared for burial and interment was made on Tuesday.

BIG FIRE CLAY OPERATION

Many Acres in Rush Township to be Opened in Near Future.

Many acres of land in Rush township, in which valuable deposits of fire clay are found, are to be opened up as a result of the purpose of the Pennsylvania Railroad to build a branch road up Morgan Run, near Philipsburg. The road is to be extended to the fire clay lands of the Morgan Run Fire Clay and Coal Company, but many other owners of adjacent lands will be benefitted by the operation.

James Passmore, of Philipsburg, and well known in Bellefonte, is the owner of 600 acres of land in Rush township in which some of the finest fire clay deposits have been found and which will be opened up in the near future.

WHERE FOLKS LIVE HIGH

Loftiest Permanently Inhabited Places in the World.

The highest permanently inhabited place in Europe is the meteorological station on the summit of Sonnblick, at a height of 10,000 feet.

In America the highest permanently inhabited place is in the village of St. Vincente, in Bolivia, with an altitude of 4850 meters. In Asia it is the monastery Hanle, in Tibet; height, 4160 meters. Leadville, Col., has an altitude of 10,185 feet.

The hospice of St. Bernard, in Switzerland, Europe's highest inhabited point aside from the station above mentioned, is but 8200 feet. Quito, the capital of Ecuador, situated near the volcano Pichincha, is 8934 feet above the sea level. The Oroya Railroad, in Peru, South American, climbs an altitude of 15,500 feet in order to cross the range of Andes Mountains.

A tunnel, the highest in the world, five miles long is now being pierced through the Andes Mountain from Arica, Chile to La Paz, Bolivia, at a height of 12,000 feet above the sea level, 700 men being employed day and night on the work. The world's highest funicular railway when completed will reach the summit of Mount Blanc, 15,782 feet above the level of the sea.

Sir Martin Conway, speaking of the high Bolivian plateau, says that it reminds him in many respects of Tibet. At 12,500 feet about sea level the climate must always be severe. The natives' habit of wrapping up their heads in shawls or ponchos is easily accounted for. Pneumonia is the commonest disease in the high palts of Bolivia.

Few people live to any great age there. Even in the town of Da Paz, which lies in a hollow and is well protected from most winds, old people are rare, and a man of 70 is pointed to as a phenomenon.

He says that it takes time to habituate one's self to living day in and day out far above one's usual altitude. Many persons can never become habituated to the altitude, and are more or less ill during the course of their stay. This is particularly the case with children and persons of advanced age.

"It may be said," says a writer in The Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette, "that horses are more sensitive than men in differences in atmospheric pressure, and doubtless a man can climb many thousand feet higher than he can take a hors.. I have not myself seen a horse or mule capable of carrying a man over ground at a higher altitude than about 10,500 feet, where they almost uniformly break down, though I have been told that in Sikkim horses carry travelers to an altitude of 18,000 feet.

"From sea level upward, as the air becomes rarer and the supply of oxygen less, the strength of man diminishes, though this diminution may not be perceived except as the result of minute and careful experiments, and the man himself may be unconscious of it, it is none the less true."

A Strange Indian Tribe.

Human tricolors—white Indians with red hair and blue eyes—are oddities that were mentioned by Major P. H. Fawcett, R. A., in an account given the other day before the Royal Geographical Society in London of his explorations in Bolivia. His experiences began in 1906 in connection with the delimitation of the Bolivia-Brazil frontier.

Ever since Pizarro's conquest of the Indians there had been rumors in the interior of South America of the existence of a strange tribe. The evidence was necessarily weak, yet he had met half a dozen men who swore to a glimpse of white Indians with red hair. Other statements had been made as to the existence of such with blue eyes.

Plenty of people had heard of them and they had even a name—"Morphegon," or bats meaning the people who hunted by night and hid during the day. Even in Paraguay he was told there was a tribe so shy as to be quite outside of communication, and another where the men talked in one language and the women in another.

Commander Julius A. Pratt Post No. 143 Dept. 111., G. A. R.

Mr. Isaac Cook, Commander of above Post, Kewanee, Ill., writes: For a long time I was bothered with backache and pains across my kidneys. About two months ago I started taking Foley Kidney Pills and soon saw they were doing just as claimed. I kept on taking them and now I am free from backache, and the painful bladder misery is all gone. I like Foley Kidney Pills so well that I have told many of my friends and comrades about them and shall recommend them at every opportunity." Sold by C. M. Parrish.

A Scallop "Wrinkle."

To butter bread crumbs for the top of scalloped dishes, I have found that a good plan is to melt the butter required and stir the bread or cracker crumbs into it, adding salt and pepper to taste. The butter is more evenly divided than by the old method of putting little "dabs" of butter on the bread-crumbs and it takes less time. Woman's Home Companion.

Foley Kidney Pills are antiseptic, tonic and restorative and a prompt corrective of all urinary irregularities. Refuse substitutes. Sold by C. M. Parrish.

TREASURER'S SALE OF UNSEATED LANDS FOR TAXES OF 1908 AND 1909.

Agreeable to the provisions of law relating to the sale of unseated lands for the non-payment of taxes, notice is hereby given that there will be exposed to public sale or outcry, the following tracts or parts of tracts of unseated lands in Centre County, Penn'a, for taxes due and unpaid thereon, at the Court House in the Borough of Bellefonte, on Monday, June 13th, 1910, at 1 o'clock, p. m., and to continue, if necessary, by adjournment from day to day, until all are sold.

SUBTLE SMARTNESS

A Quality Not to be Attained by Mere Beauty and Dress.

Smartness is a subtle quality, not to be attained by mere beauty, or by exquisite dress and faultless surroundings. Chesterfield was an ugly little man; but who could deny him smartnesss of the first water? To be smart, it is essential to be amusing, and to amuse is difficult without a flavor of eccentricity-the something original, daring, hors ligne, which duller people talk about and princes admire.

All the really smart people have been originals, and have liked to make the common herd wonder. In dress, in manner, language, in conduct they are always astonishing. To be leaders they have to devise new things. They must give the note, and not take it, and as their whims and turns of speech are imitated by the idle rich almost as slavishly as their carriages, horses and clothes, they must be Protean in their transformations and must leave the herd baffled and wondering.

Eclat, reclaime, never to be out of the public mind, are imperative for those leaders often who within the last 30 years labeled themselves "smart," an adjective that 40 years ago was associated only with the Sunday clothes of the housemaids, and was seldom spoken by polite lips.

Of course, there are other signs of smartness besides thoes two leading characteristics. The smart set have as many marks as the Buddha-hair arranged in a particular way at a particular time, altered with a magical simultaneousness the instant West Kensington has the hang of it; gowns of a special cut-it is the "cut" smart people pay for, not the fabric; fan or no fan; eyeglass or no eyeglass; a particular walk, a particular drawl, a perversion of the English language; a new adjective, a new dog, new religion, new drugs, new diets, new diseaes, new doctors, new parsons. It is not one shibboleth, but 100 shibboleths that the outsider has to master if he wants to be "of them," as well as with them. And he can never be quite, quite, like them. The smart person, like Buddha, is born, not made. Strand Magazine.

Styles in Summer Frocks.

"There is nothing monotonous about the summer frocks," says Grace Margaret Gould in Woman's Home Companion for May. "One can have any number of new gowns this season and yet not have new any two alike, and really it is their piquant charm. There are plain waists, short sleeves, and long sleeves, and skirts in so many different styles that it hardly seems possible that they were designed for the same season.

"The more simple type of dress, the peasant blouse, with the plain skirt gathered at the back, is quite the most modish model of the summer. These little dresses show the elbow-length sleeve cut in one with the bodice. The blouse has generally a round low neck finished with a frill. Many of the linen dresses will be made in this style, some times with the skirt perfectly plain and then again finished at the bottom with hand embroidery in Russian colors, for instance. Pongee is another material which will be largley used especially in its natural shade for dresses will look the most attractive with the embroidered band at the bottom, and the cuffs and frill worked in the same shade as the pongee, with the color-note, which is this season so extremely important, introduced in the belt and hat."

"Doan's Ointment cured me of eczema that had annoyed me a long time. The cure was permanent"—Hon. S. W. Matthews, Commissioner Labor Statistics, Augusta, Me.

WOMEN'S WOES

Bellefonte Women Are Finding Relief at Last.

It does seem that women have more than a fair share of the aches and pains that afflict humanity; they must "keep up," must attend to dutes in spite of constantly aching backs, or headaches, dizzy spells, bearing-down pains; they must stoop over, when to stand means torture. They must walk and bend and work with racking pains and many aches from kidney ills. Kidneys cause more suffering than any other organ of the body. Keep the kidneys well and health is easily maintained. Read of a remedy for kidneys only that helps and cures the kidneys and is endorsed by people you know.

Mrs. John Andress, 245 S. Spring St., Bellefonte, Pa., says;" I willingly confirm the public statement I gave in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills two years ago, after they had benefited me so greatly. I procured this remedy at Green's Pharmacy Co., when suffering from backache and severe pains in my loins and its use brought prompt and lasting relief. Another member of my family also took Doan's Kidney Pills and was cured of kidney trouble."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agent for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

The High Cost of Living.

Increases the price of many necessities without improving the quality. Foley's Honey and Tar maintains its high standard of excellence and its great curative qualities without any increase in cost. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, croup, whooping cough and all ailments of the throat, chest and lungs. The genuine is in a yellow package. Refuse substitutes. Sold by C. M. Parrish.

Chocolate Cream.

Mix five tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, one half cupful of sugar and one fourth of a teaspoonful of salt. Dilute with the third of a cupful of cold milk, add to two cupsful of scalded milk and cook over hot water ten minutes, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Melt slowly one and one half squares of unsweetened chocolate, add to cooked mixture. Remove from range, add the whites of three eggs beaten until stiff and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Turn into indivdiual molds first dipped in cold water, chill, remove from molds, first garnish with halves of blanched almonds and serve with thin cream in pretty individual dishes.-- Woman's Home Companion.

The Latest Belts.

Belts this season are soft in effect. They are shown in silks, satins, metal mesh and metallic-finished fabrics, and they tighly girdle the figure. Stiffer belts are also shown on Russian-blouse suits and on semi-fitting princesse gowns, and are held loosely into place through applied straps. Many of the belts have buckles of the same material with either a touch of hand embroidery to make them more attractive, or they are braided. A belt of soft, dark blue silk, for instance, will have the buckle covered with the silk decorated with a design braided in narrow dark blue soutache and fine gold braid. Woman's Home Companion.

A Psychological Wonder

Or Was It a Matter of Contagious Disease?

By GEORGE L. BYINGTON

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I arrived at N. late at night on a visit to my uncle and on arising the next morning, as was natural, went to the window to have a look at my surroundings. There was a hill not far distant, on the top of which was a house built in the form of a hexagon. There were other things to see, but somehow the hexagonal house drew my attention from all of them. It stood out alone. I saw no one moving in or about it, but in some of the windows there were evidences that it was inhabited.

The first thing I said to my uncle at breakfast was, "Who lives in the hexagonal house on the hill?"

"What made you ask that?" said my uncle.

"I don't know," I replied.

"There's just one thing I wish to warn you about while you are here. Let that house alone."

After breakfast I walked up to the hexagonal house and rang the bell.

"I have to stay in town for a few days," I said to the man who opened the door, "and am looking for a place to sleep nights."

It took me an hour and cost half a dozen lies to induce him to rent me a room for just one night. He said no one lived in the house except himself and wife in the rear basement as caretakers. That evening at dinner I told my uncle that it was too lonely for me, and I intended to take the night train for home. Instead of going to the station, I went to the hexagonal house, was admitted and shown to my room, the second story front, east.

"You won't feel creepy sleeping all alone up here, will you?" asked the caretaker before withdrawing.

"No. Why do you ask that? Anything peculiar about the room?"

"Oh, no; nothing especial. Leastaways"—

"Well?"

"I'll tell you in the morning." And he went down the stairs, his footsteps echoing loudly through the house.

I had been slumbering for perhaps an hour when I awoke with a start. For a moment I could not locate myself. Then I remembered I was Napoleon the Great. I was at St. Helena. Cursing king in my bedroom in the house at Longwood. I was very uncomfortable. I was ill. My stomach was on fire. Ah, I remembered! I had been ill for some time, and that infernal English doctor was poisoning me.

All these points came to me in quick succession. Why did I get myself into this trap? Why did I surrender to perfidious Albion? I should have known that they would risk no second escape, as from Elba. Ah, if I had had at Waterloo my old guard that I had at Jena, Wagram, Austerlitz! But they had starved or frozen in Russia. I opposed Wellington with troops officered by men they did not trust, and the officers no longer had faith in me. My star had set. Besides, I was ill. This infernal trouble or something like it was on me then.

Why am I left alone by my attendants? Where is my valet? Where is Montholon, Las Casas? Where are they all? I would call the doctor to relieve me of this infernal pain if I did not know he would give me more of his poison. I wish I had now some real poison that would let me out of this—the bag I gave Constant to keep for me, fresh as when I first received it from the chemist. I found it on that dreadful night at Fontainebleau. Had it been its original strength I would have been spared that humiliating abdication.

Some one is coming. It is a man. I can hear his footsteps in the corridor. The door is opening slowly; oh, so slowly! What suspense!

What, you, D'Enghien! Go back to your grave! Go, go, I say! It was not my fault. They carried out an order that I would have countermanded had I known in time. They were always in a hurry to obey me when I wished them to be slow. Go back, I say, or if you must haunt your slayer turn to him who blundered. I hate him, as you do. In shooting you he concentrated Europe and cost me my throne. It put me here on this desolate island to die a lingering death.

Gone? I can't stand this. I must end it. How? My razor? My valet has it. A rope? I have none. With a penknife I can open a vein. The knife I have. Shall I get it? Twice I tried when about to fall from the top of my self built pyramid, and twice I failed. Fate has never deceived me. Fate has worked in my case on converging lines. Fate will not let me take my own life. Nevertheless I can try.

Constant will get the knife for me, Constant!

No one answered.

I lay deliberating whether I should end it all or let my disease finish me till I fell asleep.

Then I dreamed that it was all over. I was in a casket perched upon an immense funeral car, passing down the Champs d'Elysee. The sidewalks, the windows, the housetops, were all crowded with vast throngs of people who as I passed uncovered, some of them waving, some crossing themselves, all excitedly lamenting. Ah, my French people, without your native enthusiasm I could not have humbled Europe!

But this Bourbon king! Fool! How dare he reawaken that spirit which has been slowly dying? Let him look out for his throne. It is more tottering than this casket away up where it sways with every rut in the street.

Well, my body is at the Invalides. Now I may rest.

I was awakened by a slight noise and opened my eyes. It was morning. The caretaker had come into my room and was setting down a pitcher of hot water. I was myself. But I had a crawly feeling from the crown of my head to the sole of my feet as if I had been keel hauled.

"Not feelin' very well this mornin', sir?" remarked the caretaker.

"No; I've had an ugly dream."

"How did the winder get broken, sir?"

"I don't know. I didn't know it was broken.

"And there's blood on the right arm of your nightshirt."

I saw the broken window and the blood and was taken all aback.

"What does it mean?" I asked.

"The sash was nailed, sir," was the only reply.

I arose, dressed myself and went straight down to my uncle, finding him at breakfast. He was astonished to see me, and I told him that I had not gone home, but had slept in the hexagonal house. He started.

"Well?" he asked eagerly.

I gave him my experience.

When I had finished he arose from the table and paced the floor.

"What do you think about the broken window and blood on my nightshirt?" I asked.

"Have you the nerve to hear how you have narrowly escaped death?"

"Yes; I have."

"Well, then, listen. The last man who lived in the hexagonal house was one who had lost his reason. He fancied himself to be Napoleon I. One morning his body was found under the window of the room you slept in."

"Great heavens!" I exclaimed, with a shudder.

My uncle went to the telephone and called up Professor Starkweather of the University of D., located a few miles distant, and conversed with him, after which I was informed that several of the professors would be down within an hour to take my statement.

I was too shaken up to eat any breakfast, so I went and walked in the garden till the professors arrived. They took me into a room and heard my story from beginning to end. Then Professor Starkweather asked me some questions.

"Have you read much of Napoleon's life?" he asked.

"Nothing but a little history, which I have forgotten."

"Did you know that Napoleon believed that the English were poisoning him while he was at St. Helena?"

"No."

"Did you know who were with him there?"

"No."

"Did you know that Constant was Napoleon's valet and that Napoleon gave him a bag supposed to contain poison with which Napoleon tried to commit suicide just before his abdication at Fontainebleu?"

"No."

"Did you know that in 1840 King Louis Philippe brought Napoleon's body to France from St. Helena and that the Napoleonic enthusiasm excited largely contributed to the revolution which dethroned that king and made Louis Napoleon president?"

"No."

"Did you know that Napoleon's shooting of the Duke d'Enghien concentrated the European powers against him?"

"No."

"Gentlemen," said Professor Starkweather to his colleagues, "it's a clear case of reincarnation."

"Rather," said Professor Markland, dean of the medical college, "it proves that insanity may in certain forms be a brain disease and that the germs of the patient who had formerly inhabited the room worked upon this young man."

"Why, then, has he recovered so suddenly?"

"Insanity in any event is affected by pure air, sunlight and other revivifying causes. The young man was not exposed long enough to enable the germs to get a permanent foothold."

"But how do you account for the knowledge the young man did not previously have of events in the life of Napoleon?"

"Psychologically considered, I admit my position is weak, but you must remember that there is such a thing as a transference of soul. However, that part of the problem is in your field rather than in mine. We study the body, you the soul."

"There is one point in the story that looks suspicious," said Professor Blenker. "Napoleon calls on Constant. Constant was not at St. Helena."

"That may be explained," replied Professor Starkweather, "by the fact that Napoleon was near his end and likely delirious. He had formerly called on Constant for everything."

While they were wrangling four more of the faculty of the university arrived, and all agreed that my statement should be taken down at once while the impression was fresh on my mind. One of their number was appointed to write, and as I told the story any one who wished would ask a question. When the statement was finished it was taken in charge by Professor Starkweather, the meeting broke up, and, bidding goodby to my uncle, I started for home, glad to get as far as possible from the scene of my adventure.

THE LATEST VOGUE.

A Dainty Frock For the Summer Girl.

GOWN OF EYELET EMBROIDERY.

There are several features about the lingerie gown illustrated that are worth noting. As you may see, most of the costume is made of wide flouncing in eyelet embroidery combined with Persian lamb of the finest, sheerest quality. The all in one kimono blouse is cut square at the neck and carried out almost entirely with the eyelet work, insertions of valenciennes lace and the lawn filling in the interstices.

The tunic drapery is of the embroidery, edged at the bottom with a ruffle of the narrow Val lace. Under this drapery the skirt is elaborately trimmed with alternate bands of eyelet embroidery, flanked on each side with valenciennes lace insertion and stripes of tucked lawn. The elbow sleeves are of the combined materials.

THROUGH THE CUSTOM HOUSE

First Aid to Folks Returning to Their Native Land.

Under the head of "Advice to Travelers" a writer in the Woman's Home Companion offers some suggestions for smoothing the rough road which returning Americans must travel.

"Keep all receipted bills for goods bought on the other side," says he, "and present them to the inspector when asking to have your baggage examined. The figures on the bill are a verification of the statement of cost contained in your declaration. Both act as guides for the inspector, whose work necessitates his making a rough appraisement of the value of an article on sight.

"If you have no receipted bills and if he thinks your declaration is very much out of the way as to the cost of an article, then it will be his duty to increase the value to an amount he thinks is fair and just. If you are dissatisfied with the value he places on the goods you may demand a reexamination.

"This demand, however, must be made immediately. The re-examination will be made then and there if possible. If it is not possible, then the article in question must be left in the custody of the customs officials and an application must be made to the collector for a reappraisement. Remember, however, you cannot have a reappraisement made after you have once taken the goods out of the customs custody.

"What has been said here applies to residents of the United States who have taken a short vacation abroad and have brought back with them small things for their own use or as souvenirs. It does not take into consideration things brought into the country for other people or for sale. Where the intention is to sell anything brought in that fact should be stated in the declaration."

Why Lick Postage Stamps?

Do the people who jeer at the cautious ones as "cranks" who refuse to lick a postage stamp know that there is a defined disease known as "the postage stamp tongue?"

This is an acute inflammation of the tongue, directly traced to the germs to be found on the gummed side of stamps or envelopes.

Other and more serious diseases have been caused by this habit that is so universal and seems so harmless.

One throat specialist in a hospital declares that many chronic affections of the throat are found among persons who have as their means of livelihood the addressing and stamping of envelopes.

Bad skin diseases have been known to follow this habit, and it has even caused pulmonary troubles.

It is, after all, but a habit and a bad one. It takes no more time and is quite as easy to moisten the stamp with a damp sponge or rag.

Keeping the Pantry Clean.

Nothing is so unsightly in a pantry or closet as a number of tin lids pitched loosely on a shelf. One woman has overcome this effect by nailing a narrow strip of wood to cleats about ten inches under her high pot shelf in the pantry.

In the space thus made the lids are slipped. The handles prevent slipping, and they can be had at a minute's notice. Ranged according to sizes, hunting for the right lid does not waste one's time.

FROM THE TROPICS TO HEAL US.

Cedron Seed Plant.

In Central America many natives are gathering the seeds of this plant, Cedron Seed, a rare medicine that has valuable curative powers. But few drug stores carry this seed, owing to the high cost of the article.

This country is a large consumer of this costly seed because it enters into the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna, sold the world over.

Abolition of the Ducking Stool.

The most noteworthy of all the instruments designed for the correction of Eve's offending daughters was the ducking stool, known as the tumbrel and the trebuchet. A post, across which was a transverse beam turning on a swivel and with a chair at one end, was set up on the edge of a pond. Into the chair the woman was chained, turned toward the water—a muddy or filthy pond was usually chosen for this purpose when available—and ducked half a dozen times, or if the water inflamed her instead of acting as a damper she was let down times innumerable until she was exhausted and well nigh drowned. From the frequency with which we find it mentioned in old local and county histories, in church wardens' and chamberlains' accounts and by the poets (Gay, for one, has a description of the process in his third pastoral, "The Shepherd's Week") we shall probably not be wrong in concluding that at one time this institution was kept up all over England. In Liverpool it was not formally abolished until 1776.—London Graphic.

Circumspect.

A very circumspect and conscientious young miss of four was sent into the parlor of a certain Philadelphia household to entertain a caller for a few minutes until her mother should appear.

The conversation drifted to a discussion of the youngster's intellectual acquirements, and the visitor asked:

"Do you know the alphabet, Marie?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Will you say it for me?"

Marie began glibly enough, but after she had given three or four letters she stopped short, saying, "If you please, ma'am, I don't think I better say any more."

"And why not?" asked the caller, surprised.

"Those are not all I know," explained the youngster; "but, you know, mamma says I mustn't tell all I know!"

Two Good Rules.

There are two good rules which ought to be written on every heart—never to believe anything bad about anybody unless it is positively known to be true; never to tell even that unless it is necessary.

Might Have Helped Some.

On one occasion the Rev. Sam Jones, the noted Georgia revivalist, had taken for his text "Vanity" and to point his moral said:

"Now, if there is a woman in the congregation this morning who didn't look into the mirror before coming to the meeting I want to see her—I want her to stand up."

A SINGLE WOMAN AROSE.

A single woman arose and stood with meekly downcast eyes. To describe her in a kindly way one would say "homely." The Rev. Mr. Jones rested his earnest eyes upon her.

"Well, God bless you, sister," he said. "It certainly is a pity that you didn't!"

Shall Disloyalty Be Rewarded?

A few days ago Democrats hereabouts were shouting themselves hoarse in praise of Lewis Emery, Jr., not for the Democratic but for the Republican nomination for Congress. At that time W. Harrison Walker was in the field for the Democratic nomination. Mr. Walker subsequently withdrew. Did the Democrats thereupon warm up for Mr. Emery for the Democratic nomination? Not so anybody could see or hear it.

The Hon. Jim. Guffey has passed the word that the Hon. Willing Candidate Heinle should be slated for Congress. The Hon. Jim. said so, and his say-so "goes." Hence the recent conspicuous silence of the said Democrats regarding the qualifications of Mr. Emery. This despite the fact that Mr. Emery was the Democratic candidate for Governor four years ago.

A Democrat's recommendation of a man for a place on the Republican ticket is on a par with the indorsement by a wholesale liquor dealer of a particular candidate for nomination on the Prohibition ticket.

The Republican party is big enough and broad enough to take care of its own affairs without the assistance of Democrats in nominating candidates on the Republican ticket. We venture the thought that were one or more Republicans to suggest the nomination of some Republican for Congress on the Democratic ticket the very Democrats who want Mr. Emery on the Republican ticket would explode with indignation. Likewise, Republicans quite properly resent the attempt on the part of Democrats to foist Mr. Emery on the Republican ticket as a candidate for Congress.

We feel that we are violating no confidence when we state that it is only within the last few days that a leading Democrat from McKean county visited Centre county and endeavored to stir up Emery sentiment among Republicans. The fact that Mr. Emery's missionary was a Democrat is in itself of peculiar significance. Centre county Republicans may well stop and reflect on the motive prompting such an appeal. To our gratification we are informed that Mr. Emery's missionary found little Emery sentiment and this chiefly among Democrats.

Just as was the case four years ago, Mr. Emery's cause today is in the hands of Democrats. He would present his candidacy under the Republican flag and with Democrats pretending to hold the flag. What these Democrats hope to accomplish is this: They expect Mr. Emery to be defeated for the Republican nomination and that he then will enter the field as an independent candidate. This would create a three-cornered fight and make possible the election of a Democratic Congressman. The nomination by a decisive vote of a straight-out loyal Republican at the primaries in June will effectually settle any thought of a three-cornered contest at the polls in November.

Mr. Emery's personality does not enter into this matter. He, personally, is a very genial, sociable man. That, however, is beside the question. Republicans are called upon to say whether they prefer to nominate for Congress a Republican who is able and who has stood by his party when his support was needed, or whether they shall indorse a man who chose to leave his party ship when he thought it was sinking and furthermore, tried his best to make it sink. Had the Union army placed a premium on disloyalty of its generals there would have been no Gettysburg and the martyred Lincoln would have died from a broken heart long before his days were cut short by the assassin's bullet.

Men are honored and rewarded for loyalty and courage and not for disloyalty and cowardice. This is true with all political parties as well as with all other organizations. At the approaching primaries, Republicans owe it to themselves to nominate for Congress one of their number who is worthy of the honor. To honor a man who is unworthy would be to sanction disloyalty and give to others selfishly-inclined the right to hope for future rewards for desertion to the enemy. The word we are receiving from Republicans over the county leaves no room for doubt in our mind as to what their verdict will be.

State Convention Call.

April 16, 1910.

To The Republican Electors of Pennsylvania:

I am directed by the Republican State Committee to announce the Republicans of Pennsylvania, by their duly chosen representatives, will meet in convention at the Majestic Theatre in the City of Harrisburg, on Wednesday, June 22, 1910, at 10.30 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following offices, to wit:

One person for the office of Governor;

One person for the office of Lieutenant-Governor;

One person for the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs, also for the nomination of a candidate for any other office which is to be filled at the general election in November next, and the transaction of such other business as may be presented.

In accordance with the rules governing the Republican party in Pennsylvania, the representation in the State Convention will be based on the vote polled at the last presidential election; under the rules each legislative district is entitled to one delegate for every two thousand votes cast for the presidential electors in 1908, and an additional delegate for every fraction of two thousand votes polled in excess of one thousand.

By order of the Republican State Committee.

W. Harry Baker,
Secretary.

The Best Kiteflier In Town.

Some years ago there died in Nebraska a man named Walsh, who, as a boy, started a suspension bridge. When Walsh was about ten years old the first steps for the construction of the suspension bridge at Niagara were taken. The first thing necessary was the stretching of a single wire across the chasm. The engineer in charge had thought of a way to get it across.

"What boy is the best kiteflier in town?" he asked.

The Walsh boy was named as the best kiteflier in the town of Niagara Falls, and the engineer accordingly asked that he be brought to him. He was made to understand that he must fly his kite across the Niagara river. He flew it across and allowed it to come down on the other side. Men were there to seize it. Then the engineer attached a wire to the string on his side, and the men on the other side detached the kite and by means of the string drew the wire across. By this, in turn, a cable was drawn across, and the bridge was well begun.—Harper's Weekly.

Antiquated Customs.

There is no court in Europe more tenacious of its etiquette—which was inaugurated several hundreds of years ago, than that of Spain. It is said that King Ferdinand VII. once made a minister resign because he had accidentally touched his hand. One of the quaintest ceremonies is the closing of the royal palace gates at Madrid every night. Electric light has been in use in the palace for quite a long while, but nevertheless every evening at 11 o'clock the officiating gentleman in waiting appears, accompanied by several servants, who carry ancient lanterns, to demand a huge key from a higher official to lock the doors of the palace. This is all the more amusing as the huge key does not fit the modern keyholes. The key is then returned to a third official, and every night gentlemen in waiting have to patrol the corridors of the palace, though sufficient guards are about, to watch over the slumbers of their royal master.

Paul the Tyrant.

Paul I. of Russia was very deaf and also very tyrannical. One day an aid-de-camp, intending to please him, approached and cried in his ear, "I am glad to see, your majesty, that your hearing is much improved!"

"What is that you say?" growled the czar.

Raising his voice, the aid-de-camp said, "I am glad that your majesty's hearing is so much improved!"

"Ah, that's it, eh?" chuckled the czar and then added, "Say it once more."

The aid-de-camp repeated the words, whereupon Paul I. thundered: "So you dare to make fun of me, do you? Just wait awhile."

Next day the aid-de-camp was on his way to the mines of Siberia.

The Lesson She Learned.

A fair western co-ed and one of the male seniors fell violently in love and neglected their studies shamefully. Both were expelled. The fair co-ed thereupon wrote this interesting reply to the faculty:

Gentlemen—You have expelled me for neglecting my studies, yet I have learned at your institution more than you will ever know. I have learned the meaning of love. What is the use of studying botany if I am not allowed to gather roses? Why should I devote myself to astronomy if I may not look at the stars? What does it profit me to spend years on mathematics and neglect my own figure? You have expelled my fiance also. Do you think he is unhappy? We were married last evening.

Sand Swept Asia.

In the arid lands of central Asia the air is reported as often laden with fine detritus, which drifts like snow around conspicuous objects and tends to bury them in a dust drift. Even when there is no apparent wind the air is described as thick with fine dust, and a yellow sediment covers everything. In Khotan this dust sometimes so obscures the sun that at midday one cannot see to read fine print without a lamp.

"St. Elmo."

Neil Twoney, who has dramatised Augusta J. Evans' novel, "St. Elmo," set himself no small task when he started out to work over into stage form the crowded incidents and dramatic situations of the book. To make clear to an audience in a theatre the characters and motives of the creatures of an author's fancy when deprived of the author's privilege of explaining at length in the printed page those essential characteristics which go to make up rational human beings is always the stumbling block of the dramatist when using material originated by another. In a work like "St. Elmo" the task is particularly exacting, for the novel has enjoyed so widespread a popularity since it was written almost fifty years ago, that to make any material change in character or situation would be to offend those to whom the works of Miss Evans are classics. It is safe to say that no other native author ever commanded the attention of a more devoted following than did Miss Evans, in proof whereof it need only be pointed out that the book to-day is as popular as it was when new and that in spite of the changing popular taste in literature. "St. Elmo" also is exceptionally rich in descriptive scenes and lengthly philosophical discussions, all of which must of necessity be discarded in preparing the book for stage use. It will be seen on Saturday, May 7, at Garman's Opera House, in both a matinee and evening performance.

Letter from Rev. Newton S. Bailey.

We wish all the Bellefonte friends of Rev. Newton S. Bailey might read a letter we received from him a few days ago. It is so full of humor that we wish it were not so personal as to forbid publication. As is well known, Mr. Bailey is located away out in the country, six miles from the nearest railroad station, which is Fairhope, Somerset county. He writes that he has passed through a severe winter in excellent health and spirits. He has four churches to minister to. They are very much scattered and to reach each one at regular times necessitates a great deal of travel, most of which Mr. Bailey does on foot. Mr. Bailey is quite a gardener and has a nice plot of ground which he takes care of during the summer months. We were glad to hear from him and to learn that he is getting along so nicely in his new field. That he may continue to prosper is our earnest hope.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
BELLEFONTE, PA.

The County at a Glance.

Howard.

The regular monthly session of the borough council was held Monday evening with the following members present: Jackson Kline, W. N. Neff, A. A. Schenck, C. M. Fox, A. Weber. H. T. McDowell and Charles Pletcher. The street committee reported that Hayes Schenck had made improvements to his walk, and that the loose stones had been removed from the streets. The committee appointed to confer with the County Commissioners in regard to the bridge at Long's mill reported that the Commissioners had filed their objections to the same. The street committee also reported that some of the walks on Spearing and Black streets were in a bad condition. The committee appointed to look up the law on the speed of automobiles and sign boards reported that they had done so and that the sign boards had been placed as required by law. The secretary was instructed to notify the owners of automobiles to comply with the law in regard to speeding. On motion Charles McMurtrie was granted permission to lay a crossing on Walnut street from the Howard house to Walizer's butcher shop at his own expense and under the directton of the street commissioner. The water committee reported that the hydrant at the Cooke property had been fixed. The nuisance committee reported that water was running onto the street from the Kline building. (This has been reported to the council a number of times, and being the property of the president of the council that body should compel him to properly spout the building so that the drop from the eaves of the roof does not fall upon the sidewalk.) The nuisance committee reported that dogs were causing much annoyance to many of the residents, that merchandise was being sold on Sunday and that cattle were pasturing and trampling upon the lawns. The street committee was instructed to look after these nuisances and enforce the law in regard to the same. Harry Butler reported that the ditch at his residence on Walnut street was closed up and that the water was running into his cellar and garden causing damage. The street commissioner was instructed to look after the same. Bills to the amount of $11.60 were read and ordered paid.

The fact that the attention of the council had to be called to the nuisance of dogs running over gardens and giving other annoyances, and cattle pasturing upon the lawns is a signal for drastic action looking to a remedy for these annoyances. Most of our citizens take great pride in their gardens and lawns and to have them destroyed in this manner is sufficient cause for asking council to use its influence and authority in abating the same. There are too many dogs in town and no cattle should be turned loose unless accompanied by a driver to and from the pasture fields. Roaming cattle from the borough or township should be taken up by the high constable.

A brother of the late William Lyons, whose death was noted last week, informs us that he is in possession of the old family Bible and that William's age would have been 90 years on the second of this month, instead of 81 years as previously given.

DIDN'T GET IT RIGHT.

He Thought He Was a Student of Human Nature, but He Wasn't.

"On this trip in," said the car conductor about 11:30 o'clock at night, "we'll begin to pick up the beaus. They commence leaving their ladyloves about 11 o'clock. I've seen so many of them get on the car that I've got so I can tell who has said a loving goodby and who has had a scrap with her. It's in the way they pay their fare."

The car stopped, and a young man stepped aboard.

"There's one," continued the conductor. "I'll get his fare and then come back and tell you how I think he got along with his ladylove."

The fare was collected, and the conductor returned to the man with whom he had been talking.

"They had a fight," he said. "I'd almost bet she told him to go and never return. Oh, I'm a student of human nature, you bet you!"

Just then another fellow boarded the car. He sat down by the "beau."

"Why, hello, John!" the new passenger said. "How are the wife and babies?"

"All well but the youngest girl," was the reply. "I'm going down to the drug store now to get her some cough medicine."

The conductor went to the other end of the car and stayed there as much as he could.—Denver Post.

THE BEST THEY HAD.

Put It All on Exhibition to Make a Good Impression.

The Norwegians are always trying to put the best foot forward, and they do it in reference to marriage as well as in reference to other matters.

It is said that a young man once went out to seek a wife and came to a farmhouse where there was more wit than money. The only thing of which the farmer could boast was one new sleeve to his coat. This must be made the most of. "Pray take a seat," he said hospitably. "But this room is shockingly dusty," and, so saying, he went about wiping tables and benches with his new sleeve, while he kept the old one behind him.

His wife possessed one new shoe and one only, but she made the most of it by pushing the furniture in place with it and keeping the other hidden beneath her skirts. "It is very untidy here," she said. "Everything is out of place."

Then they called to the daughter to come and put things to rights. But the only new thing she possessed was a cap. So she kept putting her head in at the door and nodding and nodding.

"For my part," she said, "I can't be everywhere at once."

Thus they all tried to make the young man believe that the household was well to do.—Detroit Free Press.

He Sees Double.

His name isn't really Guzzler, but it will answer the purpose, and it is descriptive. Guzzler has a habit of looking upon the wine when it is red, frequently to the extent that he can see two bottles where only one exists. Now, Guzzler is married, and recently the stork paid a visit to his abode. Several days after the event two of his friends met, and the following conversation ensued:

"Hello, old man! Hear about the doings over at Guzzler's?"

"No. Another birthday party?"

"Yes, in a way. Guzzler's wife has presented him with twins."

"How do you know?"

"How do I know? Well, I ought to know. Guzzler told me himself."

"Well, I wouldn't place too much dependence on it. You know Guzzler generally sees double!"—New York Times.

An Unnatural Conclusion.

Now she was ensconced with her sweetest and most cherished girl friend in a corner of the piazza, and I seated just inside the French window behind a massive rubber plant.

Rather significant vegetation under the circumstances, for, curious as to maiden confidences, candor compels me to admit I listened.

The bride in prospect cooed her bliss soulfully into her neighbor's ear, but through an opening in the leaves I could observe that the latter bit her lip now and then and did not appear enthusiastically joyous or congratulatory, as warranted by the occasion.

But the innocent cooing and amorous gurgling did not cease.

"And to think, to think," quoth she, "that such heavenly bliss as fell to my lot might have escaped me forever! Dear Bob! Did I ever tell you he had proposed to me twice?"

Then the unsympathetic auditor assumed an air of innocence.

"Didn't you hear him the first time?" she inquired with raised eyebrows.

She is not going to be the maid of honor.—Exchange.

Paying the Doctor.

Some American doctors are in favor of the contract system for medical service, but they are still a long way from the Chinese scheme of stopping the doctor's salary when the patient falls ill. The writer knows a New Yorker who says that if ever he is threatened with an operation he will ask the surgeon what it is going to cost. Then he will hand him the amount at once with the assurance that the fee goes whether the operation comes off or doesn't. He reasons that the doctor will then have no possible temptation if it comes to a toss up whether to operate or take a chance. —New York Press.

A Rabelais Hoax.

Rabelais, being out of money, once tricked the police into taking him from Marseilles to Paris on a charge of treason. He made up some packages of brick dust and labeled them "Poison for the royal family." The officers took Rabelais 700 miles only to be told at the end of their journey that it was April 1 and the affair was a hoax. Of course, as Rabelais was the privileged wit of the royal family, he was forgiven.

Altogether Different.

Suitor—I have come to ask you for your daughter's hand. Father—Well, the fact is we are pretty crowded here as it is, and I— Suitor—Oh, I intend to take her away from home if I marry her! Father—Oh, well, in that case— But you did give me an awful start, my boy.—Boston Transcript.

A Lovers' Quarrel.

"Hello, Fitzy! Where did you get that black eye?"

"Oh, it was only a lovers' quarrel."

"Lovers' quarrel! Why, your girl did not give you that, did she?"

"No; it was her other lover."

Like Stealing the Money.

First Artist—A Mr. Struckoyle offered Dobley a hundred pounds for that picture yesterday. Second Artist—And didn't he grab it? First Artist—No; he said he wanted time to consider. Second Artist—Poor fool, to let his conscience trouble him like that!—London Scraps.

A Dilemma.

Doctor (who is not feeling well, to himself)—What shall I do? I haven't any confidence in any of those other doctors, and, as for myself, my charges are too high.

A Cruel Retort.

Discontented Wife—Several of the men whom I refused when I married you are richer than you are now. The Husband—That's why.

KIT CARSON

A Few Friends of the Famous Pioneer Still Alive.

Situated near the junction of the Purgatoire with the Arkansas River, the town of Las Animas is of interest in its relation to the pioneer history of the West. Its vicinity has been the scene of many exciting events of early Colorado history. Fifteen miles west of the town are the ruins of Bent's old fort, the most noted of early outposts, located where one of the most traveled of the overland trails crossed the Arkansas. Five miles east of the town on the site of the Old Fort Lyon now stands the modern Naval Hospital, New Fort Lyon, the Mecca toward which Uncle Sam's seamen who develop tuberculosis look with longing eyes. Here the doctor in charge is accomplishing wonderful things with his mercury treatment of that dread disease.

New Fort Lyon with its electric light, cold storage, artesian water and sewerage system is a modern and model city. Its 250 patients have all the comforts and conveniences of a city of the first class, except that it is compulsory that they live in tents and spend most of their time in the open air. Bowling alleys and billiard parlors are furnished for their pleasure and recreation, as well as tennis and ball grounds. Here is located the house in which Kit Carson died, soon to be turned over to the Daughters of the Revolution of Colorado and by them restored. This association intends to gather here relics of the great guide and scout and to preserve them for the benefit of future generations. Two miles south of Las Animas on the Purgatoire, on a ranch whose buildings are crumbling to ruins, once called Boogsville, is the old home of Carson, and parts of the walls of the old adobe house in which his wife died are still standing. Mrs. Carson, a Mexican woman, died in 1867, her husband the year following, and in 1869 both bodies were removed to Taos, N. M., by John Huff, a friend of Kit's, where they now lie.

There are still persons in Las Animas who were associates and friends of Carson. Luke Cahill, was Carson's ord rly when Kit was brigadier general in the United States service, and was present at his death.

Carson was a man who possessed no great mental gifts, but was a steadfast friend and comrade. His reputation as a guide and scout is traceable to his illimitable knowledge of the plains and mountains. None of the old-time frontiersmen was so well acquainted with the passes of the mountains from Fort Laramie to Santa Ge as was he, and none of them had that penetrative knowledge of Indian character that he possessed. His superiors had implict confidence in this knowledge and relied upon it. He was practicaly commander of every force he guided. He was never eager for a fight and his ways of avoiding one were his strongest recommendations. A knowledge by the Indians that Carson was guide wasa party's best protection.

I went out to-day across the old Carson trail where it approaches Bent's fort. In some places the winds of 50 seasons have furrowed it deep into the soil; at another, but a few miles from Las Animas, it lies at the bottom of a reservoir that irrigates thousands of acres. Numerons railroads now cross it, each one daily transporting more freight than by the old methods was carried in a year. Here and there along the line of the old trail a piece of board or a cluster of them marks the resting place of those who fell by the way. Where there is more than one the rule is to give the Indians credit.

The pioneers of history have been unlettered men. From Boone down the ranks have been filled by men whose principal acquaintance has been with nature. I have known a number of them who were unassumingly faithful until death as friends, and who never killed game except when the camp required it. Those that were married, whether to Mexican or Indian women, were kind to their wives and beloved by them. Jim Baker, who was married to Snake woman, was twice saved from death by her interposition. With absolutely no thought of her own danger she faced death to save his life. One day, as we were riding up Snake River, in Wyoming, Baker laid his hand on my arm to call my attention to the variegated colors laid on the foliage on a mountainside by the early frosts.

Old Jack Rand, the hermit of Middle Park, who corresponded with several of the early Governors of Colorado, and whose letters to the Denver papers were eagerly looked for, was a crank on game destruction, and I have heard him berate more than one hunter for killing more game than he could use. He had been a sailor when a young man, and the finest entertainment I ever had was sitting by the fireplace in the Hermitage, his home in Middle Park, listening to his recital of events on the waters and in foreign ports. He had never been to school, but was a great reader. His language was simple but elegant; his memory was tenacious and correct. Sitting in the shadows at the fireside, with the pine logs throwing flashes of light over his long gray locks and into the darker recesses of the cabin, he reminded me of the oracle of old. He always had an iron tea-kettle with hot water on the coals, and at midnight he brewed "a cup of coffee for two." Each night his toast was the same, "God bless you, Frank; good night."

I was snowed in at his place in the winter of 1879-80, and the remembrances of that time are the pleasantest in my life.

Uncle Dick Wooten, who held the key to the Raton Pass and levied tribute on the freighters of the Santa Fe trail before the advent of the railway, was a comrade of Carson's. Wooton, nearly blind, spent the last years of his life selling the book portraying his experiences in the West.—Forest and Stream

The Kaffirs Thought It a Joke.

I once took some Kaffirs from their desolate homes in the more desolate gorges beyond the mountain ranges to the more civilized south. Like most savages, they looked with stupid indifference at the marvels about them, and once only were they excited by an incident which opened their eyes to what they considered a most extraordinary and unnatural state of things.

They were descending a road when one of them chanced to remark that he was hungry, and the English "sahib" bought him some food at a wayside shop. The Kaffir saw the money change hands.

"How is this?" he inquired in surprise. "Do you have to pay for food in this country?"

"Certainly."

"What a country!" cried the man in amazement. Then, after pondering awhile, he continued doubtfully: "Suppose a man had no money in this country. He might starve."

"It is quite possible."

The Kaffir shook with uncontrollable laughter. It was the best joke he had ever heard. He then explained the ridiculous system to his companions, and they roared in chorus. —"Where Three Empires Meet."

Literary Censorship in Russia.

In an article on the literary censorship in Russia a writer in the Frankfurter Zeitung says that some of the queer examples of this work on the part of the czar's government are worthy of note. In a poem the line "Under strange skies we may be happy" was canceled, with the remark that "no sky can be more conducive to happiness than that which spreads over Russia." A biography of Sumarokow mentions the novel "Korew" as his first "creation." The sentence was blotted out because "God alone creates. Man may write, work, compose, etc., but he does not 'create.'" When the names of the gods of Greek mythology are written capital letters must not be used "except in the case of Mars. Our gracious czar has had so many wars that he owes Mars this compliment." A poem was suppressed because it contained the line, "To solitude devoted, I despise the world." The censor said: "Despising so generally includes also the czar. Thank me, writer, for saving you from Siberia."

Ancient Table Courtesies.

In the Ambrosian library at Milan there is a thirteen century manuscript entitled "Fifty Courtesies of the Table." Its author is Fra Bonvesin of Riva, and it throws an interesting light on the table manners of those times. "Do not," writes this rigorous censor, "fill your mouth too full. The glutton who fills his mouth will not be able to reply when spoken to." The perfect diner is adjured not to soak his bread in his wine. "For," adds the writer, "if any one should dine with me and thus fish up his victuals I should not like it." But of the fifty "courtesies" mentioned by the ecclesiastic the prize most certainly must be awarded to the following: "Let the hands be clean, and, above all, do not at table scratch your head, nor, indeed, any portion of your body." After this the advice to refrain from wiping one's fingers on the tablecloth comes as an anticlimax.

Let the Lights Go Out.

It is a lonely little fishing bay in a corner of the Cornish coast, but it boasts a lighthouse on its queer old quay and also a story concerning it and its ancient keeper. The light was noted to be a little erratic, and so one day to the ancient keeper thereof came an officer of the coast guard. "What is this I hear?" he demanded. "Is it true that your light is never alight after midnight?" "That's right nuff," assented the ancient one equably. "'Tis a fack and well known that all the boats be in and safe afore 12 midnight, so I be savin' the lie!" And he looked smiling for approbation.—St. James' Gazette.

Nature as a Healer.

A great, broad, consoling and fundamental fact remains that in a large majority of diseases which attack humanity under 90 per cent of the unfavorable influences which affect us nature will effect a cure if not too much interfered with. As the old proverb has it, "A man at forty is either a fool or a physician," and Nature is a good deal over forty and has never been accused of lacking intelligence.—Woods Hutchinson, M. D., in Delineator.

His Qualification.

"I'd like to get a job on a newspaper."

"Had any experience as a journalist?"

Fatal Defect.

"He hasn't any bad habits and comes of a long lived family."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Great Error.

"My hero dies in the middle of my latest novel," said the young author.

"That's a grave mistake," replied the editor. "He should not die before the reader does."—Atlanta Constitution.

FREE RANGE NATURE'S PLAN.

Oh, you hot air story of raising myriads of fine finished fowls on the tomato plant plan, packed like sardines in little boxes on a city lot, while gilt edge profits roll in till bank clerks get lazy prostration piling them up, you surely have wild west, wildcat El Dorados beaten to a frazzle!

Just as you despise a flat wallet, so "nature abhors a vacuum" and likewise allows no crowding, but demands so much air space and exercise room for life and perfect development. Whence comes our billion dollar poultry product? From broad, beautiful farm acres, from ordinary farm flocks and from farms where great poultry plants flourish to make the United States champion poultry producer of the world.

There is where millions of fowls at the dawn spread out like a fan over wheat, oats, barley, corn, buckwheat and alfalfa fields to forage, revel in cool, shady, fruitful orchards in the heat of the day, and on dewy sod and fresh furrow gather the seeds, green, juicy bugs, worms and minerals necessary to their perfect development.

For health, growth, weight, reproductive energy, egg production, nature prescribes no lunanitary, insane, intensive plan, but furnishes free range, the ideal.

How happy the crowing cocks, cackling hens and trilling turkeys, exercising in bright sunlight and pure air on clean ground and dewy grass and gathering the special food that fits their nature and develops them to their best to produce their best!

When taken from such environment and finished properly here are the finest formed, best flavored, healthiest, prettiest, most profitable market fowls.

Here are the prima donna cacklers that lay stacks of big, finely flavored eggs that taste for more, cooked or raw, command a select price, beat up into snowy, stiff froth for angel's food and furnish the delectable golden custards "like mother used to make." Here are the big boned, brawny breeders whose highly fertile eggs give large hatches of big, strong, easily raised chicks.

Under such circumstances fowls make less work, are affected least by disease and parasites, keep down weed and insect pests, gather much of their ration and systematically manure the ground.

Nature's plan for poultry is free range, and full success comes not without it.

DON'TS.

Don't get mad when customers complain. They may be O. K. after you explain.

Don't sell a customer the worst you've got unless he picks them by sight and pays you on the spot.

Don't get the blues if your first hatch is a failure. O'er such a trifling thing we ought to sing.

TOOK THE GUARD'S PLACE.

Dr. Byles Shouldered a Gun and Kept Himself From Escaping.

One of the most famous of the old Puritan divines was Dr. Mather Byles, who was born in Boston in 1706 and who was the first pastor of the Hollis Street Congregational church, to which he ministered for more than forty years.

Dr. Byles was famous as a humorist and wit, and innumerable anecdotes are related of his clever quips and retorts. He was a zealous Tory and warmly advocated the cause of "the mother country" against the colonies. In November, 1777, he was arrested as a Tory, tried, convicted and sentenced to be confined on board a guard ship and sent to England with his family within forty days. The sentence was afterward commuted by the board of war to confinement in his own house, a guard being placed over him with instructions not to permit him to leave his residence for a moment under any circumstances.

On Thanksgiving morning, observing that the sentinel, who, like many of the colonial soldiers, was a simple rustic, had disappeared and that Dr. Byles himself was pacing up and down before his own door with a musket on his shoulder, the neighbors crossed the street to inquire the cause of this singular spectacle.

"You see," said Dr. Byles, "I begged my guard to let me go out to procure some cider with which myself and family might celebrate Thanksgiving day, but he would not permit me to stir. I argued the point with him, and he has now gone to get the cider for me on condition that I keep guard over myself during his absence."

THE ANCIENT BOW.

It Varied In Shape With the Different Nations.

Although universally used by the ancients, the form of the bow varied with different nations. The Scythian bow was in the form of the letter C, and the bow of the Tartars, descendants of the Scythians, still keeps that shape. The Greek bow was not more than four feet in length, but so stout and stiff that it required considerable strength and skill to use it. It is said that the first Greek bows were made from the horns of a species of goat, the bases being united by means of a metallic band. Afterward other material was used in their manufacture, but they still retained their original shape. These bows were too short to be of much use, and only a small portion of the troops were armed with them.

The Romans brought the bow to Britain, where it at once obtained favor and during the middle ages was extensively used, forming an important weapon of the armies of that period. The English archers were said to be the finest in the world, and their skill decided the battles of Crecy, Poitiers and Agincourt. The bows used were of two kinds—the longbow and the arbalest, or crossbow. The arbalest was made of steel or horn and was of such strength and stiffness that it was necessary to use some mechanical appliance to bend it and adjust the string. The arbalesters carried quivers with fifty arrows and were placed in the van of the battle.—St. James' Gazette.

Why She Couldn't Accept.

Telephone operators who plug wrong numbers or get the wires crossed sometimes are responsible for very embarrassing situations, as was exemplified by a broker in this city the other morning. The broker called up his home number and said to the person on the other end of the wire:

"Hello, dear. Is that you?"

"Yes," replied a sweet toned voice.

"Well, I've been thinking about you all morning. I want you to come downtown and meet me for lunch, and we'll go to a show this afternoon."

"Well, that would be very nice," replied the person on the other end, "and I should dearly love to do so, but my husband is home, and I'm afraid he'd object. Don't you think you've got the wrong number?" — Philadelphia Times.

Weight of Atmosphere.

Atmosphere is the name applied to the gaseous envelope that surrounds the globe. It consists of a mechanical union of nitrogen and oxygen in the ratio of four to one, together with a relatively small amount of carbonic acid gas and a little water vapor. Its thickness is about fifty miles, although it probably extends in an attenuated form as far as 500 miles. This is inferred from the observation of luminous meteors. It exerts a pressure of fifteen pounds to the square inch at the earth's surface and weighs over eleven and a half trillions of pounds. Each adult inhales one gallon of air per minute and consumes thirty ounces of oxygen daily. An ordinary gas jet consumes as much oxygen as five persons.

The Scoffer.

"Here," solemnly said the Bostonian, "General Warren fell."

"So?" replied the gentleman from Chicago, running a speculative eye up and down the perpendicular of Bunker Hill monument. "Must have been a swell subject for a moving picture act."—Puck.

As Good as Refused.

"And she refused you?"

"Practically. She said she would marry me as soon as I settled down and went to work at something worth while."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Kitchen Sink.

An eminent physician said, "If I am called into a case of diphtheria, the first thing I look at is the kitchen sink." The dangers arising from a badly-kept sink cannot be exaggerated, nor can any degree of care in avoiding them be considered extreme. The waste-pipe from a kitchen sink, says Farm and Home, should have boiling water and ammonia, or washing soda, poured down it each day At least once a week it should be treated to a dose of some good disinfectant, such as chloride of lime.

THE STUDY OF LIZA ANN

A Character That Was Not Read Aright by the Author.

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Lawrence Stanton had gained his reputation as a great author through a faithful portrayal of types. He determined now to combine business with pleasure and take a trip to some unfrequented mountainous country where he might come in contact with the people and make a study of them in order to weave a story about them. He especially desired to find one character, an ignorant and attractive young girl; but, though many could easily answer the first requirement, the latter was always missing until he met—her.

This was the day that he had followed the lonely trail up and up, through sunshine and shadow, until he came upon her suddenly where she was sitting upon a fallen log. She arose, startled at Stanton's appearance.

"Don't go," he said quickly. "I am only resting for a few moments."

She hesitated, pulling at her bonnet strings undecidedly as he lit his pipe. Then curiosity overcame prudence.

"Whar you from?" she asked.

He waved a hand indefinitely toward the east. "My home is over there," he said. "And yours?" The girl flashed a smile at him and imitated the vague movement of his arm.

"Up thar," she answered.

Stanton laughed. "Got a mother and father?" he asked. She nodded vigorously.

"And what is your name, O maid of the mountains?"

She resumed her seat upon the fallen log. "Liza Ann," she answered, and then, "What you here for?"

"I am here," said Stanton gravely, "to obtain information which may be valuable to me in the production of a book."

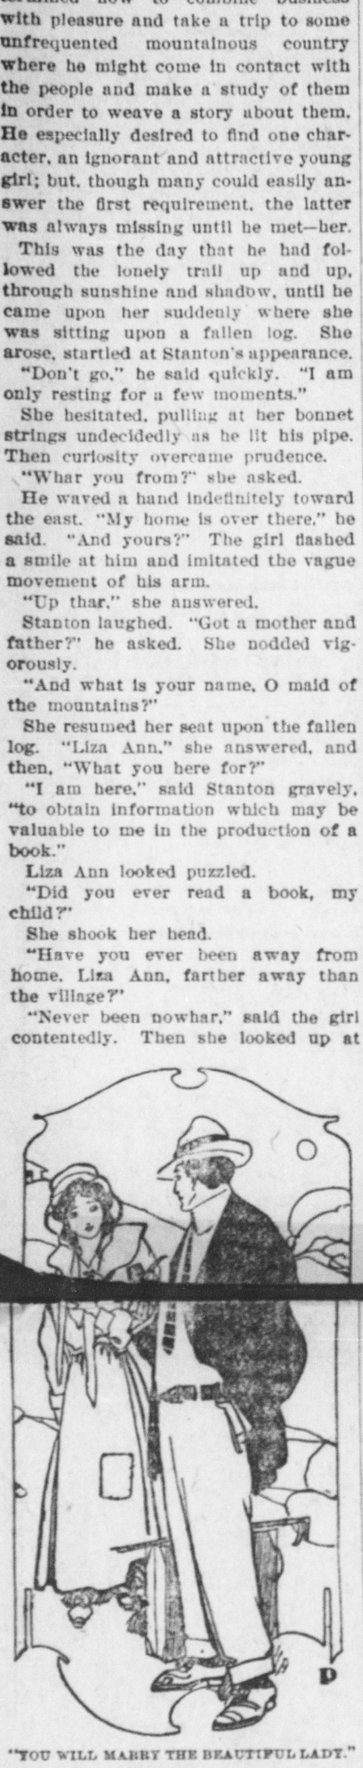
Liza Ann looked puzzled.

"Did you ever read a book, my child?"

She shook her head.

"Have you ever been away from home, Liza Ann, farther away than the village?"

"Never been nowhar," said the girl contentedly. Then she looked up at



"YOU WILL MARRY THE BEAUTIFUL LADY."

him. "Tell me about that place whar you come from."

And Stanton told her.

Slowly the sun sank down behind the tall trees. Liza Ann slipped to the ground. "I'm goin'," she said.

"You will come here tomorrow afternoon, will you not?" Stanton begged. He intended to have his notebook with him then. "I will bring a book to show you, with pictures of the places we have been talking about."

Liza Ann smiled delightedly. "Yaas, I'll come," she drawled, and Stanton wondered how she could run so lightly and gracefully up the mountain path in the heavy shoes that were so many sizes too large.

He had just settled himself comfortably at the same picturesque spot upon the following day when Liza Ann appeared. Her shyness seemed to have vanished, for she responded merrily to his sallies, then silently turned the pages of the book which he had brought, while Stanton wrote rapidly, pausing to look up at her from time to time.

She came again and again at the man's bidding to sit beside him as he worked. Stanton studied her moods and emotions as a naturalist might analyze some wonderful butterfly, while the book progressed rapidly. He brought his camera, too, and took many successful pictures of the obedient little subject. The one which pleased him most was that of Liza Ann just as he had first seen her, the sunshine sifting down through the leafy trees to rest upon her upturned face. This, he decided, would make a charming frontispiece for the new book. She was very proud of the copy of the photograph which he gave her.

So the golden days passed, and later, when the early moon came peeping over the mountain peak, they would walk together up and up the fragrant pathway. On one of these evenings he told her such parts of the story as he thought she might understand—of the winsome girl who lived in a log cabin home and dressed in calico.

"That's me!" cried Liza Ann and clapped her hands gleefully.

Then he told her of the beautiful lady who wore satins and jewels. She looked up at him with startled, widening eyes.

"Who's that?" she demanded.

"That, my child," Stanton answered, with an odd smile, "is only a woman of the world."

"I don't like her," the girl burst out passionately; "I don't like her." And in a moment she had left him.

The man laughed amusedly. He knew that she would come back to him again, and she did. He found her waiting at the old trysting place on the night that he was going away. Her face was very pale in the moonlight.

"What a doleful Liza Ann!" he teased. She looked at him dumbly.

"I will come back, little one," the man comforted. "You must not forget me, and one day you shall lead me up the lonely trail again, while I tell you how much I have missed you since we said goodby."

The girl raised her dark and solemn eyes to his. "You will never come back," she said quietly.

Stanton laughed. "Well," he answered evasively, "there will be the book to finish first, and then"—

"Then," said Liza Ann in that same dull monotone, "you will marry the beautiful lady."

Stanton did not reply to this. "Goodby, my little mountain maid," he said. "I will send the book to you, and remember that the man who wrote it will be thinking of you always."

"I don't want your book!" she burst out fiercely.

He tried to put his arm about her, but she darted from him and went running fleetly up the narrow path. Far above a mossy bank lay bathed in moonlight. Stanton, watching, saw the girl pause a moment here and then throw herself face downward upon the ground. The man lit a cigar leisurely, then picked up his valise. Still the little figure lay quite motionless. "Strange creatures these," he said musingly and continued his journey downward.

Much work had accumulated during Stanton's absence, and he was very busy for some time after reaching home. Then he returned to the book once more, walking to and fro as was his custom while thinking out the details of a story. Often he would pause before the picture of Liza Ann which had been placed upon the mantelshelf. He seemed to gain inspiration from the witchery of her laughing face. Another picture stood near in a golden frame—that of a woman serene and beautiful who was wearing a wonderful gown. The author ended his walk abruptly this evening and seated himself to read the paper; then, with a sharp exclamation, he looked more closely at the printed page. The picture from the mantelshelf in some unaccountable way had been transferred to the paper before him. Liza Ann, seated upon a fallen log, the old sunbonnet framing her laughing face, smiled happily out upon the world with childish wonder in her eyes. Beneath the picture Stanton read, "Miss Judith Jerrold, who is appearing at the Star theater this week in 'The Transformation of Liza Ann.'"

Feverishly the man turned to the theatrical notes: "Miss Judith Jerrold comes to the Star theater this week in a new play which has been written expressly for her by Henry Clayton. Miss Jerrold has been spending the summer months in a remote part of the mountains, resting after an exhausting winter season and studying the speech and mannerisms of the simple folk who will live upon the stage in Mr. Clayton's production of 'The Transformation of Liza Ann.' There are many emotional actresses. There is but one Judith Jerrold, and she will move us to laughter and tears with the mishaps of Liza Ann."

Stanton jumped to his feet. It was late, but he must see her tonight, must know for a very certainty the truth. Half bewildered, he entered the theater and sat through the performance as one in a dream. The great actress was holding an impromptu reception upon the stage after the play, so he pressed forward through the crowd which surrounded her. She advanced to meet him and graciously extended her hand, but a mocking light shone in her dark eyes.

"So," she said laughingly, "I am discovered. My only apology is that, having been in seclusion so long, the desire to act a part became irresistible. I had read many of your delightful character studies and longed to see if I could impersonate the unsophisticated mountain girl so truly as to deceive even you, a student of types. The result has been satisfactory to myself, but disappointing, I fear, to the author, as you will find that many of the original and ingenuous sayings which so amused you at the time were merely quoted from the play which you have seen tonight."

Stanton's face grew very stern. "A greater part of the book will have to be rewritten," he said. "The incident has been an unfortunate one for me."

The actress was wearing the trailing lace robe in which she appears, you will remember, during the last act when the half wild little creature is transformed suddenly into a great heiress, but she looked up at the man now with the soft, wide eyed reproach of the innocent mountain girl. Again he seemed to see her lying prone in the moonlight.

"Yes," she said slowly, "it may have been unfortunate for your book, Mr. Stanton, that this ignorant, lovable child never existed, but it was rather fortunate, don't you think, for poor little Liza Ann?"

With a bright nod she dismissed him and turned to greet a new admirer. Stanton turned to follow her, hesitated a moment, then silently made his way out into the night.

Gumption on The Farm.

Be prompt at meals.

Is the mower ready?

Cold wet May, barn full of hay.

Don't slight the corn; corn is King.

A field is not fenced when the bars are down.

Don't put away steel tools wet; dry them first, then oil them.

Lift up your eyes occasionally. All good things aren't in the furrows.

If you think nobody cares for you, have a carbuncle on the back of your neck.

The boy smokes cigaretts behind the barn because dad smokes cigars in the open.

Never lead a colt at the end of a long strap. Men have been killed in this way.

Cut your clover while it is in the bloom. Dead-ripe clover is just about spoiled so far as feed is concerned.

Wood ashes or lime should not be applied mixed with, or in direct contact with, stable or hen manure.

Don't throw out apples, potatoes or turnips where stock can get them, and choke. Either bury or slice them.

After all it is the producing power of the farm that determines the boy in his going or staying. Show him that there's money in it, and he will stick to the old farm like a sand-bur to a sheep's tail.

Don't let the back step be unsightly with swill pails, cat dishes and hen food, thus strewing food and attracting flies and disease. Cart away all the old cans, broken dishes, old coats and boots, from back places and yards.

On some soils it does not pay to plow too deep. For instance, take it where the plowpoint strikes hard-pan; no use to pull the horses to death and tire ourselves all out to bring that to the surface. It is not worth while after we have done it.

Here is the most approved method of treating seed potatoes to prevent a scabby crop: Soak the whole seed for two hours in a mixture of one-half pint of formalin (often called formaldehyde) and fifteen gallons of cold water; dry the seed, cut, and plant in ground that has not recently grown potatoes.

Must the horse go? is the anxious query of the Illinois Farmer. To be sure he must go, and the faster the better. Who wants a horse that does not go? In these automobile speed days the faster the horse can go the better we like him, and soon nobody will be satisfied with less than a two-minute clip.

Probably not one farmer in a thousand ever took his mowing machine guards out and ground them on the cutting edge. Look at them and see how dull they are. Some day before haying, when you have a little time, just take them all out and sharpen them. You have no idea how much better they will work. The machine will cut almost like a new one.

Tarring corn: In coating seed corn with coal-tar as a protection against crows and blackbirds, put the grain into a pail and pour on enough warm water to cover it. Add a teaspoonful of tar to a peck, and stir well. Throw the corn out on a sieve or in a basket to drain and then stir in a few handfuls of land plaster (gypsum). Do not pour the tar on the dry seed.

Sometimes folks get a good many irons in the fire at the same time in spite of themselves. Jobs come thick and fast, some days. The best way to do, then, is to keep calm and go straight ahead,—doing all the little things that lie in one part of the farm when you are in that locality, and then go on to something else. Finish what you have on hand. Time brings all out right to the man who works this way. From May FARM JOURNAL.

Johnny's Fear.

"What are you thinking about, Johnny?" asked the teacher. "You seem to be greatly worried."

"I was reading an article in one of the magazine last night about the danger of all our forests being destroyed unless something is done to stop the people who are cuttin' down the trees."

"Yes. Forest denudation is a thing that ought to be prevented. But I wouldn't let it worry me if I were in your place."

"I can't help thinkin' how sad it would be if I grew up and got run over by the cars, and the forests were all denuded, and there'd be no chance to get a wooden leg.

Hints For Stock Owners.

Dock the lambs early that are to be kept in the flock.

The flock should be turned to pasture early, while there is a short bite, but leave them out only a short time at first.

The change from dry feed to pasture should be made very gradually.

Sudden changes cause indigestion and scours.

A run on the rye fields will be good for the sheep and good for the rye.

The difference in the handling of two colts may make several hundreds of dollars difference when they are offered for sale.

Before turning the young horses and colts to pasture, have the teeth of each one examined by a competent veterinary surgeon.

Defective teeth may retard the growth and development of a colt, causing a loss.

Driving on one rein is usully caused by a sharp tooth or teeth.

Don't yank or whip the horse, but find the cause. It may be a sharp tooth or the harness may be ill-fitting.

Some men whip the horses because they are in a bad frame of mind themselves.

Hogs are waste savers. A farm without hogs has many leaks.

The fall litter should come in early September, if possible; therefore the sows should be bred in May.

Do not put any other stock in the pig pasture.

Cattle do not relish eating after pigs, and colts are apt to injure hogs by chasing them.

Look out for creep holes; the little pigs will find them.

Fortify your wire fence by placing boards around the bottom. The tighter these fit to the better.

Swine learn bad habits easily, and are very cute.

The cows should not be driven faster than a walk while on the way to the place of milking or feeding.

Give the calves a clean lock of bright clover or mixed hay every day. You will be suprised how soon they will begin to eat it.

The spring calves should be kept in roomy box stalls the first summer, so they can be protected from the scalding sun and bothering flies.

When the calf is about a month old separator milk can be given with flaxseed jelly added. Begin with about two tablespoonfuls and increase to a cupful.

This is the month when cows go to pasture through a large part of the country. Give them a good start. Keep them in good heart till they have really made the change from hay to grass. It will pay. From May Farm Journal.

Marble Polishing.

Marble polishing is simple and quickly done. The cakes are carried from the sawing room and placed on a flat revolving iron table. The iron brushes off the rough particles on the surface, and the operation takes about five minutes. Then the slab is attacked by a man with an emery wheel. Three grades of emery are used, and it's only about a minute to each grade. Next come three doses of felt, each time the felt growing finer in grade. The felt is attached in a layer to a flat wheel, spun by electricity, and as it hums you can see the marble begin to sparkle. The finishing touches are put on with the use of a fine felt rub, oxalic acid and oxide of zinc. The operator simply smears the surface with the mixture, gives a couple of minutes' vigorous turn of the wheel, and the slab then goes to the packer.—New York Press.

Field and Nye.

Eugene Field was a great lover of old books and quite a collector of them. His means were not adequate to his desires, however, and one of the quaintest proofs of this was a slip of paper found by a purchaser of an old volume in Field's handwriting, evidently an impromptu verse:

Kind friend, for goodness' sake forbear
To buy the book thou findest here,
For when I do obtain the pelf
I mean to buy the book myself.

Another bit of rhyme which is thoroughly American is in the preface to one of Bill Nye's books. It runs:

Go, little booklet, go,
Bearing an honored name,
Till everywhere that you have went
They're glad that you have came.

Castor Oil.

The castor bean is a native of India. The United States produces most of the coarser kind of oil, while all the finest comes from Italy. Common castor oil is of an ugly greenish tinge and has to be allowed to stand in the sun to bleach, but the Italian article is beautifully clear when first cold drawn. Cold drawn oil is the best. It is got by crushing the fresh seeds between steel rollers. The castor oil plant can be grown in England, but there it is an annual. In southern Italy it becomes a tree twenty feet high and strong enough for a child to climb up into it.

Very Like a Bull.

The head of the house had been ill for many months and had lost his appetite.

"I can't seem to fix anything that he'll enjoy, and he hardly eats anything," the mistress was saying to the maid, who was a new arrival from the old country.

"That's always the way," returned the girl. "They's all the same, them invalids. All they want is nothing at all, and then when you bring it to them they don't eat it."—Exchange.

M All are cordially invited to attend.

A very genial visitor to our office yesterday was T. J. Moore, of near Howard, who became enrolled as a subscriber to "The Republican." Accompanying him was his eight-year-old son, Charles Edwin Moore, whose rosy cheeks attested to the good health that comes with outdoor life on the farm. Charles helps his father by watching the cattle and he is such an active and sturdy youngster that it is a safe guess that he does his work well. Mr. Moore is engaged in farming and lumbering. He is just about over with a nine weeks siege of rheumatism, and like anybody else afflicted with that bothersome ailment, is mighty glad to be able to be up and about again.

CENTRE COUNTY BOY'S SUCCESS

C. Harvey Hile's Rapid Advance in Street Railway Business.

The many boyhood friends of C. Harvey Hile, who years ago lived at Pleasant Gap and who at one time worked on the old Beaver farm, near Bellefonte, will be interested to learn of his rapid rise in the business world until he now holds the very responsible position of assistant to the first vice president of the Boston & Northern and Old Colony Street Railway companies, of Boston. This association represents 128 street railway companies, operating 5,300 miles of single track in six New England states with an investment of upward of $300,000,000.

It is said that Mr. Hile receives a salary of $10,000 a year. He recently was elected president of the New England Street Railway Club, a social organization of prominent street railway men in the several New England states, The club gave a large banquet a short time ago, at which Mr. Hile presided. The club has a membership of 747.

When a Centre County boy goes out into the world, with hardly one dollar to rub agoinst another, and wins the success that has come to Harvey Hile, it is a tribute not only to himself out to his native stamping ground. Here's wishing him greater success and conveying the message from home that his old friends are proud of him.

Serenaded New Landlord.

Landlord Henry Kline, who on Monday assumed charge of the Haag Hotel, was tendered a fine serenade that evening by the Coleville band. All of the members of that popular organization are personal friends of the new landlord and they arranged the serenade in his honor as a surprise. Mr. Kline is already in charge and down to business at his hotel. Judge Orvis on Monday granted the petition for the transfer of the license from J. Mitchell Cunningham to Mr. Kline. The latter's wide acquaintance in Centre county, his enviable reputation for honest dealing and his all around genial nature make him especially well qualified to give to the Haag Hotel a most successful period. Mr. Kline intends giving every branch of the hotel his personal supervision, so that the numerous patrons of that well known place will be assured of every attention and comfort and that all appointments will be of the very highest standard.

Wedded at Spring Mills.

William R. Homan, of Lewistown, and Miss Mazie E. Detweiler, of Spring Mills, were married at the latter place on Monday, last. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. A. Snook. Mr. and Mrs. Homan will reside at Lewistown.

Read "The Republican." $1.00 per year in advance.

'Tis Now Squire Henry D. Brown.

Henry D. Brown on Monday, last, assumed his new official duties as Justice of the Peace. He will, for the present at least, have his office in the basement of the Aiken building, where he has been located in business for a number of years. Squire Brown is naturally a mild mannered fellow, but violators of the law shouldn't bank too heavily on his good nature. Unless we are much mistaken, it will be as easy for Squire Brown to say "Ninety days" as it is for him to sing, "Daisies Won't Tell."

Boyd Nolan Hurt.

Boyd Nolan, a popular young railroader, last week met with a painful accident in the local yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad. His left arm was caught between two cars and terribly bruised. Much to the gratification of the young man and his many friends, it will not be necessary to amputate the injured arm.

Two Cases of Typhoid Fever.

Two very serious cases of typhoid fever are reported near Unionville. Philip Peters, a son of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Peters, near Unionville, is convalescing after a hard siege. Miss Reba Calhoun, a daughter of Mrs. Harry Calhoun, is critically ill from typhoid, although her recovery is confidently looked for by her attending physicians and friends.
